AU facing insolvency

metr EXCLUSIVE
Changes in enrolment demographics a key factor

Anna Brooks
 Metro | Calgary

Athabasca University is projected to be insolvent by the 2016-17 school year, according to an internal report obtained by Metro. The province's new NDP government indicated Wednesday it will step in to assist the cash-strapped institution, if need be.

Advanced Education Minister Lori Sigurdson said the report "outlines some very serious sustainability issues" that "cannot continue" for the post-secondary institution with a satellite campus in Calgary. AU president Peter MacKinnon told Metro in February the "university potentially has a terrific future" but admitted Wednesday the 45-year-old institution could indeed be in deep trouble, citing changes in enrolment demographics and an insufficient operating budget as the main factors.

"Are there serious sustainability issues? Yes, there are," MacKinnon said. "We don't have an emergency today, but the concern is the possibility of insolvency."

MacKinnon said the university doesn't receive credit in its operating budget for out-of-province students, but more than half of AU grads are not from Alberta.

"The fact is the operating budget is the lowest of any public institution in Alberta, as a percentage of expenses," he said.

Men plead guilty in case of pellet-gun road rage

Two men have pleaded guilty to assault charges stemming from a case of road rage in Calgary last summer.

Court heard passengers from two vehicles started arguing at a gas station in the city's southeast last August. The fight continued after the vehicles took off and escalated when one of the passengers shot a pellet gun and shattered two windows.

The suspect vehicle was found a short time later with a pistol and a canister of bear spray inside.

Saadullah Bhatti has pleaded guilty to assault with a weapon, and Armanjot Dhaliwal has admitted to assault. Both are expected back in court on Oct. 19 for sentencing.

City councillors want better dandelion control

Several city councillors say they're sick of dandelions and want city crews to do a better job of controlling them.

Nine councillors have signed a motion to be presented at Monday's council meeting calling for a report on "effective dandelion control" for the entire city.

The motion goes on to say that Calgary's "parks, green spaces, roadways and boulevards are thick with dandelions appearing uncared for and unsightly." METRO

Attempts to recover notebooks 'fruitless'

LAW ENFORCEMENT

Personal info of 372 people held in stolen documents

Morgan Modjeski
Metro | Calgary

Officials with the Calgary Police Service say five notebooks stolen from the vehicle of an off-duty police officer in early April are likely gone for good.

Staff Sgt. Quinn Jacques, the officer who leads the CPS Guns and Gangs Unit, which was tasked to investigate the theft, explained he's "not optimistic" the notebooks, which contain personal information on 372 people, will be found. "We've exhausted all leads on recovering the notebooks," said Jacques, noting police were in contact with members of Calgary's underworld while trying to find them.

"We talked to a ton of people about possible leads on the notebooks and people in that element where they may be in a position to receive the stolen property," he said, noting the CPS "cast a wide net and talked to a variety of people."

"All of those conversations and investigative avenues were fruitless."

Police don't expect to retrieve the stolen notebooks, despite Calgary police interviewing "a ton" of people. METRO FILE

The notebooks were taken alongside a service rifle, which was since recovered, when Const. Stephen Baker went to the Crowfoot Schanks Sports Grill and left the items in his vehicle.

When he returned to the parking lot, police said the car was "broken into" and the rifle, which police said Baker had taken home to clean, had been stolen.

"It's my understanding that the vehicle was likely unlocked," said Jacques.

Police said the term "break-in" can be used to describe a theft, even if the vehicle or property was unlocked.

Const. Baker remains suspended with pay.

Doug King, a professor at Mount Royal University's department of justice studies, said the entire situation is a concerning one, and he feels police need to be more open about the investigation.

"The police service needs to be very sure and transparent as to what they're doing here," he said, noting he feels the entire event is concerning.

"These are the kinds of things that make the average citizen think, 'Well geez, are the police not shooting straight with us? Are they not telling us the truth?'"

King said the fact police were in communication with the city's criminal element is not a surprise, calling it "good police work," as officers regularly go to people they feel may have useful information.

SECONDARY SUITES

Plebiscite remains a possibility

Robson Fletcher
Metro | Calgary

Despite a hefty projected price tag and a recommendation from city staff against the idea, Calgary city councillors refused Wednesday to rule out a plebiscite on secondary-suite legalization.

A non-binding vote on the highly contentious issue would cost $390,000 if it were attached to a general municipal election and about $2 million if it were held as a standalone ballot, according to a city report.

Due in part to the cost and in part to the fact that such a vote would not guarantee a resolution to the perennially controversial topic, the report recommends that "no further consideration to a vote of the electors on a question relating to secondary suites be given."

But city councillors voted that recommendation down by 5-2 margin during a committee meeting Wednesday.

Calgary resident Kevin Phillips with the Wildwood Community Association told the committee a plebiscite is not a realistic solution because the complex ins and outs of proposed changes to secondary-suite rules are poorly understood by most people.

"If I thought that the City of Calgary could educate people to a level where they could provide a rational response, I would support a plebiscite," he said.

"But having seen the processes employed to date, I don't think that is a realistic objective."

CRIME

Man charged in fatal gas-and-dash

Morgan Modjeski
Metro | Calgary

Calgary police say charges are pending against a 20-year-old man they allege killed a 35-year-old Centex employee, Maryam Rashidi, while trying to flee the scene of a gas-and-dash on Sunday.

The man was taken into custody after police were led to a residence in Beddington Heights on Tuesday night, following tips from the public.

The incident started in the 1700 block of 16 Avenue NW when Rashidi attempted to stop the truck, a stolen 2006 Ford Super Duty, from leaving a nearby parking lot.

The truck then hit her, carrying her for roughly 15 metres, before she was thrown from the hood and run over, according to police.

Insp. Ken Thrower said the man is facing a host of charges, including criminal negligence causing death and hit-and-run causing death and could be facing life in prison.

"When you look at the maximum penalties of criminal negligence causing death versus manslaughter, they're pretty much the same," he said, noting the man will be named after he is officially charged before a justice of the peace.

A second person taken into custody, a 16-year-old male identified by police as the truck's passenger, was not charged on direction from the Crown's office.

Thrower explained the service is relieved charges have been laid.

"The biggest thing was to try to find this individual as soon as we can, get them into custody so they can't create anymore tragedy on the street," he said.

The value of the fuel the driver allegedly stole before fleeing the scene was pegged at $113, but Thrower said no dollar figure is worth risking a life.

"You don't want to demean from this individual who, at the time, was doing the right thing in her mind for the right reasons," he said.

"You can't compliment her enough to try and do that, but she gave up her life trying to stop a crime."

Police say its investigation into the incident is ongoing and more charges could be laid.

HIT-AND-RUN

Account is called 'In Trust for Ahmad and Koroosh'

Robson Fletcher
Metro | Calgary

A trust fund has been set up for Maryam Rashidi's family, one day after the 35-year-old engineer, wife, and mother died in hospital from injuries she suffered trying to stop a fuel thief at the gas station where she had just started working.

Maryam was taken off life support Tuesday after her six-year-old son Koroosh was able to see his mother one last time, said close family friend Amin Attar, who was at Foothills Medical Centre with Maryam's husband Ahmad Nourani Shallo when she died.

The account is named "In Trust for Ahmad and Koroosh" and set up through TD Canada Trust, with branch number 01729 and account number 6737034. Attar said at one point Maryam's family thought of bringing her body home to Iran but now Ahmad is planning a local funeral and burial for his wife.

The family came to Canada last year and initially lived in Montreal before moving to Calgary in the fall after Ahmad and Maryam, both engineers by training, found work with an oil-and-gas firm. Both were laid off in mid-May, however, and Maryam decided to take the job as a gas-station attendant "in order to bring food on the table," said Attar, adding that they have no extended family in Calgary and Ahmad is still without work.

In a TV interview with CBC Wednesday, Ahmad said he's not angry about his wife's death and is mainly concerned for his son, who doesn't understand why his mother died.

"She was the best thing that I had," Ahmad said. "She was a kind mom. She was very responsible."

A 20-year-old Calgary man is facing numerous charges in relation to Maryam's death.

Insp. Ken Thrower, commander of the CPS traffic section, speaks with reporters on Wednesday afternoon.

'The harassment can be bad'

SOCIAL ISSUES

Homeless woman says she's frequently treated poorly

Lucie Edwardson
For Metro | Calgary

For homeless Calgarians, the streets of the city can be an unwelcoming place at times.

Trisha Bears paw, who lives at the Calgary Drop-In and Rehab Centre (The DI), says she has seen other homeless people fall victim to — and has personally been the target of — verbal and physical abuse.

She said she often encounters discrimination and harassment while walking around downtown.

"We are normal people doing day-to-day things," Bears paw said. "But the harassment can be bad."

Debbie Newman, executive director at the DI, said people often attack what they don't understand.

"It's easy to complain about

Trisha Bears paw, who volunteers with various programs at the Calgary Drop-In and Rehab Centre and events like the Scotiabank Calgary Marathon, said she routinely encounters harassment of homeless people on city streets. LUCIE EDWARDSON/FOR METRO the individual that might be drunk or high, or look disheveled, but who is not harming anybody," Newman said.

"You don't often hear about public outcry when the perpetrator is a person who might be better off and living in a community far from the downtown core."

Jordan Hamilton, manager of external relations for the DI, said there is often more than meets the eye going on in homeless people's lives, and if others knew more about the individuals they were picking on, they might think twice.

People are fearful of things they don't really understand.

Debbie Newman

"I personally believe that you are actually making our city a better place with all of your community service," Hamilton told Bears paw, who spends much of her time volunteering with the DI's community gardens, kids in local daycares, as well as at the DI's book nook and city events like the Scotiabank Calgary Marathon.

"People are fearful of things they don't really understand or what they can't relate to," said Newman.

"Hopefully we can begin to work so that there is an understanding of what those living in poverty face, and look at different ways we can engage with vulnerable populations and not to be fearful of them so other people can get to know them for who they are, not what their circumstances are."

IN BRIEF

Councillors call for bylaws for medical marijuana businesses

After a clinic that helps patients access medical marijuana opened last month in the Inglewood area, two city councillors now want pot-related businesses to be more specifically regulated by Calgary's bylaws.

Couns. Diane-Colley Urquhart and Gian-Carlo Carra plan to bring forward a motion at Monday's council meeting calling on the city to develop "rules that manage clustering, proliferation and separation from schools" of businesses related to medical marijuana.

Such businesses could include any that provide "counselling, assistance, advice and dispensing of medical marijuana," according to the councillors' notice of motion.

The document also calls on the city to "encourage future owners of medical marijuana counselling businesses to consult with the local community and neighbours and to consider the use of a Good Neighbour Agreement."

ECONOMY

Restaurants weigh in on minimum wage

The restaurant industry is trying to set the table in advance of talks with Alberta's NDP government about its plan to increase the hourly minimum wage to $15 by 2018.

Restaurants Canada is recommending the province take the economy into account and phase in any changes to give business owners time to adjust.

The industry says restaurants and bars should still be allowed to pay a lower rate to servers who earn tips and young people in their first jobs should be paid less.

It wants the province to study how a planned hike to the minimum wage in October would affect the economy and jobs before announcing any future increases.

Alberta's current minimum wage is $10.20, among the lowest in Canada.

Mark von Schellwitz, a Restaurants Canada spokesman, says business owners fear raising the rate to $15 per hour by 2018 is not sustainable given Alberta's slumping oil sector.

"We have certainly heard from a number of our members over the last few weeks who are extremely concerned about surviving this increase, especially in an economic climate where they are already seeing their sales decline because of the downturn," he said Wednesday.

"We are asking them (the NDP government) to adjust that promise and let's take this one step at a time, one year at a time."

Industry groups are to meet with the NDP government in Edmonton on Thursday to discuss the planned increase.

Restaurants Canada says it has more than 4,000 members in Alberta who employ more than 150,000 people.

Premier Rachel Notley promised to increase the minimum wage during her election campaign.

Kid-flasher still at large

INDECENT EXPOSURE

Teachers confronted man flashing students

Parents in Calgary's Bridlewood community have been on high alert following an incident earlier this month in which a man is said to have exposed himself to neighbourhood students.

Officers were called to the Monsignor J.J. O'Brien Elementary and Junior High School on reports of the flasher at roughly 12:45 p.m. on June 3.

Teachers at the school confronted the man, forcing him to flee down Bridlewood Drive, but Alia Vanzhov, president of the Somerset Bridlewood Community Association, said the incident has her people in the area worried.

"Of course its concerning," Vanzhov said. "You don't ever want any kind of threat to our kids."

She said police has been in communication with the community association — something, as president, she said she appreciates — but added that parents in the area are now going to be "hyper-vigilant."

"You want to make sure that the kids are aware of any strangers and if they see any strangers to let parents (and) teachers know," she said.

Described as an Asian man with a slim build, standing roughly five-foot-nine, police believe he's also responsible for a similar incident in Copperfield.

In that case, a man was seen masturbating in the green space behind the 200 block of Copperfield Manor SE in late May.

Const. Matt Ball of District 8 said police don't know if the suspect will reoffend, but they have to act as if he will.

"Statistically, when we look at similar occurrences of strings of behaviour, it certainly indicates that there's a likelihood it will happen again," he said, noting he'll be increasing patrols in the area.

"It's something that we have to be aware of, and certainly devote the proper resources and time to try and catch this guy," Ball said.

Anyone with information about this incident is asked to contact the Calgary Police Service at 403-266-1234, Crime Stoppers to report the information anonymously, or 911 in case of an emergency.

Statistically, when we look at similar occurrences of strings of behaviour, it certainly indicates that there's a likelihood it will happen again.

Worries circulate over AU's future

EDUCATION

Athabasca University may be insolvent in two years

Anna Brooks
Metro | Calgary

The future of Athabasca University (AU) is on shaky ground with projections that the university is likely to be insolvent by the 2016-17 school year, according to a sustainability report obtained by Metro.

AU interim president Peter MacKinnon said "serious sustainability issues" have arisen due to changes in enrolment demographics and significant drops in operating budgets.

"AU is a very important institution," he said. "It's too important to fail."

Shauna Snow-Capparelli, an associate professor at Mount Royal University and chair of the Bachelor of Communication-Journalism program, completed a master's degree through AU and said there are few institutions like it in the province.

"It would be a real loss for people if that went away, because unfortunately there aren't a lot of options in Alberta," Snow-Capparelli said.

She added that AU's situation is something all post-secondary institutions in the province are worrying about.

"All of us are struggling," she said. "The previous government didn't put education — at least, post-secondary — as a priority and it needs to. Alberta won't have a future if there's no future in education."

Jason Nixon, the Wildrose MLA for Rimbey — Rocky Mountain House — Sundre, formerly served as the AU Students' Union president.

He said AU has struggled for years, and some major changes need to happen in order to save it.

"This isn't a surprise to any of us who've been around AU," Nixon said. "It most definitely worries me. It's just not sustainable under the current funding model of the Alberta government. Something has to be done."

Lori Sigurdson, minister

“Alberta won't have a future if there's no future in education.”

Shauna Snow-Capparelli, associate professor at Mount Royal University

of innovation and advanced education, said her ministry is working alongside AU to explore ways to keep the institution afloat.

"I take this situation seriously," Sigurdson told Metro. "The Alberta government is ready to work with the university and help it become more sustainable."

She added that "it is the responsibility of the board of governors to address this situation" but the province "will be having further conversations with the university and its broader community as we work through these concerns."

MacKinnon said the ministry's interest in aiding AU in its plight means there may be light at the end of the tunnel.

LEGISLATURE

Speaker's job a complex one

Alberta's outgoing legislature Speaker of the House Gene Zwozdesky says his successor will have one of the most paradoxically involved and disconnected jobs in parliamentary democracy.

"The Speaker's job was certainly among the best jobs (I had), but it's also the loneliest job that you could ever imagine," Zwozdesky said Wednesday.

"You do not do anything political when the house is in session, and you don't do any political fundraising or attend political fundraisers for others," he said.

All MLAs are to convene in the legislature chamber Thursday to select a new Speaker.

It's a secret ballot to reflect the impartiality of the job, but the majority NDP caucus has already signalled it will endorse its Medicine Hat MLA Bob Wanner.

No other caucus has endorsed another candidate. The winner needs a simple majority of votes.

Zwozdesky set the tone early that parliamentary debate — while unbridled — should err on the side of civility.

Bars raise a glass to accreditation

Best Bar None sees boost in participation

Morgan Modjeski
Metro | Calgary

Whether it's clearing away old condoms from around the outside of a bar or ensuring written policies are in place for emergency response, the Best Bar None program is seeing more establishments sign on.

A partnership between the City of Calgary, the Calgary Police Service and the Alberta Gaming and Liquor Commission (AGLC), the accreditation program has seen a significant increase when it comes to voluntary participation, and some local managers say it has helped improve operations and safety at their bar.

In order to get Best Bar None accreditation, bar operators must meet up to 101 criteria — including 46 mandatory items.

"Accreditation means nothing if the whole team is not on board," said Jennifer Allan, operations manager at Bottlescrew Bill's Pub, adding the process helped her ensure all staff carry the same level of responsibility. "Success in the program, whether you're accredited or not, only comes from teamwork."

In order to get accreditation year after year, Allan said her staff works together to meet the criteria, which ranges widely from having a written policy on glass collection to mandatory sanitation efforts to ensure the bar's surroundings remains clean.

"It's not a one-man show," she said.

On June 15, the organizing partners will honour several Best Bar None participants.

Graham Wadsworth of the AGLC said the jump from roughly 33 participants to 52 in 2015 is beneficial, as more bars are examining how they can meet the high standards.

"It starts at the ownership and managerial level and it puts responsibility on that level to turn the microscope inwards — as it were — to look at their own operations," he said.

The awards ceremony, which takes place at TELUS Spark, will also serve as an opportunity to recognize those who have done well within the program.

ManWoman's vision on display

Local gallery hosting first exhibit since artist's passing

Anna Brooks
Metro | Calgary

He was impossible to miss, with his long hair and bright yellow clothes.

He covered himself with more than 200 swastika tattoos in an attempt to take the sacred symbol back from the Nazis.

He was an artist and a spiritual visionary. His name was ManWoman.

Legally changing his name after a spiritual awakening in the 1960s, ManWoman came to be a living symbol of transcendence, not just in Cranbrook, B.C., where he hailed from, but in artistic communities across the globe.

ManWoman passed away in 2012, and now, for the first time since his death, the Stride Art Gallery Association in Calgary is hosting a rare exhibition of his artwork.

Astarte Sellars, ManWoman's wife of almost 35 years, said the exhibition will serve as an acknowledgement of his artistic life.

"One of the key features of his art practice was following his inner guidance," Sellars said.

"It gave him the courage to stand up for all the things he was guided to express in the face of some pretty severe opposition at times."

Sellars said residents of rural Cranbrook in the 1960s struggled to accept ManWoman, with his long hair, abundance of tattoos and non-conformist ideologies.

"In those days, that was really scandalous," Sellars said. "People would cross the street to avoid walking past him on the sidewalk. He'd have shows, and his art would be sidelined or become marginalized because of his outrageous appearance."

But as time went on, ManWoman's influence reached international audiences, and he eventually became a mascot of sorts for Cranbrook.

"He really had an influence on people's tolerance and understanding of things that are maybe different," Sellars said.

"It just underscored his sense of what he thought was right, he would do, no matter what."

+ INFLUENCE

Nicole Kelly Westman, incoming director at Stride Gallery, said many Alberta-based artists have been influenced by ManWoman's work and that the gallery has been working hard since ManWoman's passing in 2012 to organize an exhibit in Calgary.

"He was a prolific artist and he inspired the trajectory of many artists," Westman said.

Westman added that although it's been a challenge curating a show without the artist, ManWoman's commitment to challenging stereotypes and social stigmas makes his work as relevant as ever.

"ManWoman was never shy of controversial topics avoided at the dinner table," Westman explained.

"ManWoman's work has an entry point to initiate a conversation surrounding controversies that may otherwise be avoided."

NORMAN RADDATZ

Police sought murder suspect for hate crime

Edmonton police say a man suspected in the shooting death of one of their officers was being investigated for a hate crime that was anti-Semitic in nature.

Norman Raddatz, 42, allegedly mounted an online campaign of "extreme" bullying against another man in the city last year.

The harassment was specifically anti-Semitic, police spokesman Scott Pattison said Wednesday, and the target and his family became so concerned for their safety that they filed a complaint a few months ago.

Pattison wouldn't provide more details about the alleged harassment but police previously said evidence in the case dated back to February 2014.

Eight officers went to Raddatz's home Monday night to serve him with documents ordering him to appear in court on a charge of criminal harassment. They also had an arrest warrant stemming from a by-law offence. After the officers knocked, they got a battering ram to break in. That's when bullets started flying through the front door. Const. Daniel Woodall, a 35-year-old officer in the hate-crimes unit, was killed at the scene. A second officer, Sgt. Jason Harley, 38, was shot in the back but was saved by his bullet-proof vest.

The other officers were pinned down by a barrage of bullets over the next 10 minutes, Chief Rod Knecht told reporters earlier this week.

More than 50 bullet holes were found in the house and garage across the street.

Moments after the shooting stopped, the house started on fire. Police later found a body in the basement of the burned-out home and believe it is Raddatz, although an autopsy is needed to identify the remains and the cause of death.

Jonny Jacques' T-shirts raising money for Daniel's family

Jonny Jacques, owner of Print Machine in Edmonton, felt he had to do something to help after hearing of the fatal shooting in the city's west end where one officer was killed and another injured.

"It was on my mind, and then Tuesday morning a good friend of mine texted me and said 'You should make EPSStrong T-shirts.' I said 'Yeah, we should,'" he explained. Jacques took his friend's advice and quickly created the #EPSStrong T-shirt campaign

Tuesday night. The $20 tees will have the social media hashtag, as well as the blue and black ribbon used in memory of fallen police officers, printed on them.

Proceeds raised from the T-shirt sales will be donated to the immediate family of Const. Daniel Woodall, who was killed Monday. The company is hoping to raise $50,000 in T-shirt sales as part of the campaign.

The #EPSStrong social media hashtag was used by Edmonton Police during Monday's events and has since been also used to pass along messages of condolences from people around the world.

Jacques said, although he doesn't know the Woodall family, he felt compelled to do what he could to assist them.

"I just thought it was the perfect time to just help someone in need," he said. The fundraiser will end on July 10 and the shirts will be printed 10 days following the campaign closure.

IN BRIEF

Autopsy: Const. Woodall died from gunshot wounds

Autopsy results confirm Const. Daniel Woodall died from gunshot wounds, according to information released from Edmonton Police Wednesday.

The Medical Examiner's autopsy shows that the manner of death is homicide. This makes Woodall's death the city's 10th homicide in 2015. The autopsy was conducted after Const. Daniel Woodall was struck several times while police were at a home on 62A Avenue and 186 Street Monday night.

Officers were at the home Monday to hand Norman Raddatz, 42, a bylaw warrant and to serve new criminal charges tied to harassment. METRO

Students confused over use of e-cigarettes in the classroom

SMOKING

Board has yet to roll out formal policy for vaporizers

Helen Pike
Metro | Calgary

Don't chew gum, put away your cell phone, and leave the vaporizer at home.

At least, in some classrooms. Individual schools within the Calgary Board of Education are still self-regulating when it comes to electronic cigarette policies, as the overarching body has yet to roll out a specific set of rules for the devices.

"The CBE has no system-wide policy," the board said in an emailed statement to Metro this week.

The Calgary Catholic School Division, meanwhile, banned e-cigarettes from its school properties last year, barring kids from bringing vaporizers to class at all. The move was applauded by anti-tobacco advocates at the time.

Jaz Lasko, a student at the public board's Robert Thirsk High School, said it's her impression that it's effectively up to teachers to enforce the school's rules.

When students are spotted with e-cigarettes in class, she said, teachers "either tell them to put it away, or take them away until the end of class," depending on the teacher. Lasko also said she finds it disrespectful when people vape indoors.

When asked more specifically about the policies that are in place, the board directed Metro toward an "administrative regulation" about its smoke-free policy.

The board's emailed statement continued by noting numerous schools, including Robert Thirsk, ban the technology in class or on school property.

"They follow the Smoke-free Environments AR (administrative regulation) ... and consider e-cigarette use to be 'smoking,'" the unnamed CBE spokesperson stated.

Meanwhile, the City of Calgary took one more step this week toward restricting e-cigarettes in the same way as regular cigarettes on city property.

A city committee endorsed a new bylaw on e-cigarettes Tuesday, which is now set to go before council for approval.

During the committee meeting, health experts raised concerns over so-called "vaping," a colloquial term now used to describe the smoke-like vapour emitted from e-cigarettes, which has become an increasingly commonplace practice in outdoor and indoor spaces given the lack of regulation.

Dr. Brent Friesen, a medical officer of health with Alberta Health Services, said e-cigarettes appear to be more popular among teenagers and young adults than traditional tobacco products.

He noted a 2013 Health Canada study of youth (ages 15 to 24) which found about 13 per cent reported having smoked a regular cigarette within the past month, while 20 per cent reported having used an e-cigarette.

One of the biggest concerns, Friesen said, is the fact that many of the liquids vapourized in e-cigarettes contain nicotine.

"Nicotine is an addictive substance so the concern is, with youth experimenting with e-cigarettes and nicotine-containing liquid, that they'll become addicted to nicotine," he said.

That could lead young people to smoke more traditional tobacco products in the future, Friesen added, as e-cigarettes still aren't "fully replicating the hit someone gets from the use of a cigarette."

Student Hayley Karst told Metro this week "there should be rules for indoor spaces" in Calgary schools.

"People do it in class sometimes, and that bothers me," she said.

"It affects us in the class, because either we're distracted when there's suddenly a cloud of smoke or it's the smell," Karst added.

Video store owner tries to stay afloat

SMALL BUSINESS

Kickstarter campaign aims to cover costs of re-opening

Helen Pike
Metro | Calgary

After being smoked out of her second location off Macleod Trail, the owner of Jon Lord's Casablanca Video hopes to be back for a third act.

Sheryl Guillaume, who owns Calgary's last remaining video rental store, has tentatively found a 4,000-square-foot location in the city's south end — a spot that remains top secret, for now — and hopes to raise enough money to add a screening room to the mix of her already robust library of rarities and classics.

"I brought a lot of independent movies to town," said Guillaume.

"I always had this dream of having a screening room, (and) we ran out of room in Marda Loop. Then in our new location we had ... this one area, but the thing was I bought over 10,000 more movies."

The room would feature guest speakers and Saturday-morning cartoons for kids, according to Guillaume.

"From being in that era, I wasn't really allowed to watch cartoons on Saturday until my dusting was done, and then the cartoons were over," she said.

With more than 80,000 films in her library, she has something for virtually everyone and said there's been support for her to keep at it.

But to get things running smoothly, she figures she needs to reach a $65,000 fundraising goal, which would cover costs for staffing, signage and renovations.

80,000

The number of films in Guillaume's extensive library, which includes rarities and classics.

If her Kickstarter goal isn't met, it's back to the drawing board — or scripting room.

But after several attempts, Guillaume said she's running out of ideas on how to survive in the Netflix era.

"I don't know what else I can do," she said. "I'm just trying to take it one day at a time."

Updates on the effort can be found on the Jon Lord's Casablanca Video page on Facebook.

Power, politics and Solomon

CBC severs ties with host after allegations of impropriety

Among the dwindling stars at the beleaguered CBC, it seemed the public broadcaster could bank on at least one: Evan Solomon.

The anchor of CBC News Network's daily political series Power & Politics and Radio One's flagship political program The House had long been a rising luminary and was widely considered to be a possible successor to Peter Mansbridge.

His marquee status was backed by everything one would look for in a CBC personality: a long resume of TV and radio hosting gigs; field experience extending to federal elections, budgets and foreign stints around the world; and a confidence in interviews with prime ministers, world leaders and U.S. presidents.

"It's not who I admire (and there are many, many great journalists working today who I could name), but it's what I admire," Solomon told the Ottawa Citizen of his professional drive in an April 24 article available online.

"I admire journalists who break stories, make news and don't follow the pack. One thing that isn't going out of style: good journalism."

The marathoner is a best-selling author, a children's book writer, a one-time magazine publisher, and a family man. His rise from CBC golden boy to established figurehead seemed assured.

Until Tuesday.

CBC severed ties with Solomon an hour after Torstar News Service alleged he took advantage of his position to broker lucrative art deals between a friend and wealthy interview subjects.

Power and politics, indeed.

Solomon has denied any wrongdoing and has turned to his union, the Canadian Media Guild, to examine his options.

But it's an undeniable blow to what had been a relatively unblemished career, and certainly to his post as a watchdog.

Solomon studied English literature and religious studies at McGill University, a reflection of his interest "in myth and ritual," as he explained in an interview with January Magazine about his first novel. THE CANADIAN PRESS

Beginnings of a CBC star

Evan Solomon launched into the spotlight as co-founder of the tech-and-culture magazine Shift. He was the editor-in-chief from 1992 to 1999.

From there, he went on to helm several youth and tech-oriented shows for the CBC, which capitalized on Solomon's youthful energy as TV newsrooms chased younger viewers.

Solomon's shows included CBC's six-part writers-and-thinkers series The Changemakers, Newsworld's technology show Futureworld, the PBS co-production Masters of Technology, and Newsworld's culture and ideas show Hot Type. He shifted to broader news fare when he was named co-host of the weekly news and current affairs shows CBC News: Sunday and CBC News: Sunday Night, platforms that took him on reporting stints across the country and around the world. CBC editor calls on journalists to 'stop providing ammunition'

A raft of ethical lapses by journalists has the editor-in-chief of CBC News calling on members of the profession to clean up their act.

Jennifer McGuire bemoaned the state of the industry in a message to staff Wednesday, a day after the public broadcaster fired CBC News Network personality Evan Solomon over conflict-of-interest allegations.

While detailing the circumstances of Solomon's ouster, McGuire cited a recent LinkedIn article by Al Jazeera America journalist Ali Velshi which chastised TV news for "shooting itself in the foot."

"It's time for every single professional journalist and media organization to stop providing ammunition," McGuire said in the memo.

Some people have questioned the integrity of CBC's news, McGuire continued, "and that of CTV, Global, NBC and ABC."

Auditor General Michael Ferguson is interviewed in his Ottawa office Wednesday. FRED CHARTRAND / THE CANADIAN PRESS

Senate audit cost modest

SPENDING

$23.6 million within office's overall budget

Auditor General Michael Ferguson says the $23.6-million price tag for his critical audit of Senate spending is not extraordinary for his office.

He said the sweeping two-year probe was paid for within the confines of his budget.

In an interview, Ferguson broke down the costs for the audit released Tuesday.

He said the $23.6 million includes costs that would have been incurred regardless of what the auditors were working on, such as salaries, utilities and office space.

He says those "allocated costs" account for about half the $23.6-million total, putting the direct cost of the audit between $11 million and $12 million.

"That really represents the opportunity costs," Ferguson said. "Those are the auditors that could have been doing something different."

Those direct costs aren't out of the ordinary for a large audit conducted by his office, he said.

Ferguson said auditors spent on average about 1,000 hours reviewing each senator because some cases were more complicated than they'd expected. is of office underestimated how much time each file would take, but "we ended up having to do all of the audit within our regular office budget." CITIZENSHIP CEREMONIES

Ottawa set to introduce bare-face law

The Conservative government is planning to bring in legislation to ban face coverings at citizenship ceremonies.

Tim Uppal, the federal minister of state for multiculturalism, says the government supports Quebec legislation that would require people to have their faces uncovered when giving or receiving government services.

The Alberta MP says Canadians expect that people who are taking the oath at citizenship ceremonies should do so with their faces uncovered.

Earlier this year, the Federal Court ruled against a government policy requiring people to remove face coverings when taking the citizenship oath.

At the time, Prime Minister Stephen Harper promised an appeal.

Uppal said the government will now set that policy in law.

"Our government will be moving forward in the coming days with legislation with respect to the face coverings at citizenship ceremonies and we will consider what other measures may be necessary," Uppal said Wednesday.

"We broadly support Quebec's legislation regarding the uncovering of faces for giving and receiving public services," he added.

Most Canadians would agree, Uppal said, echoing Harper's argument against face coverings at citizenship ceremonies.

"At a time when people are pledging allegiance to this country, when they're joining the Canadian family, we find that Canadians expect that anyone joining the Canadian family at that time would have their face uncovered," Uppal said.

Harper has called the facial coverings worn by some Muslim women are the product of a culture that is "anti-women."

No sign of either man after fifth day of manhunt

Police in body armour resumed house-to-house searches near the maximum-security prison in northern New York where two killers escaped using power tools, authorities said Wednesday.

On the fifth day of looking for David Sweat and Richard Matt, state police said the house searches aren't the result of any new leads and law enforcement is retracing its steps in Dannemora, just over 30 kilometres from the Canadian border.

"They'll be doing a 100 per cent sweep from the prison right out, see how that goes," said David Favro, the sheriff for Clinton County, where the prison is located.

Law enforcement officials reiterated their plea for the public's help in reporting anything unusual in the area.

They'll be doing a 100 per cent sweep from the prison right out.

Sheriff David Favro

through a steel wall, broke through bricks and crawled through a steam pipe before emerging through a manhole outside the prison grounds.

They were discovered missing early Saturday after stuffing their beds with clothes to fool guards, leaving behind a taunting note: "Have a nice day."

There was speculation that the inmates had arranged for someone to pick them up outside the prison and were long gone from the area, even in Canada or as far as Mexico.

The escape from the 3,000-inmate state prison has raised suspicions the men had help on the inside. Investigators have been questioning prison workers and contractors to uncover who may have supplied the power tools.

Sweat was convicted in the 2002 killing of a sheriff's deputy and was doing life without parole. Matt was serving 25 years to life for kidnapping and dismembering his boss in 1997.

U.S. set to deploy new troops to Iraq

President Barack Obama ordered the deployment of up to 450 more American troops to Iraq on Wednesday in an effort to reverse major battlefield losses to the Islamic State of Iraq and the Levant, an escalation but not a significant shift in the struggling U.S. strategy to defeat the extremist group.

The U.S. forces will open a fifth training site in the country, this one dedicated specifically to helping the Iraqi Army integrate Sunni tribes into the fight, an element seen as a crucial to driving the ISIL out of the Sunni-majority areas of western Iraq.

The immediate objective is to win back the key city of Ramadi, which was seized by extremists last month. The plan is not a change in the U.S. strategy, the administration says, but addresses a need to get Sunnis more involved in the fight.

Some local citizens in Sunni-majority areas fear an inva-

EGYPT

Suicide bomber dies in attack on temple

A suicide bomber blew himself up Wednesday close to the ancient pharaonic temple of Karnak in southern Egypt, a site visited by millions every year, the government said. No tourists were hurt, and the Nile-side monument was not damaged.

The attack was the second this month near a major tourist attraction in Egypt, marking a shift in tactics in a campaign of violence waged by Islamic militants against the government of President Abdel-Fattah el-Sissi. The attacks suggest extremists are shifting from shootings and bombings of security forces to targeting Egypt's vital industry.

The industry is only just beginning to recover from the turmoil in the country since 2011. On June 3, gunmen on a motorcycle opened fire outside the famed Giza Pyramids on the outskirts of Cairo, killing two police officers.

In Wednesday's violence, officials said security at Karnak prevented the suicide bomber from entering the temple complex, and their forces battled two gunmen who were with him, killing one and capturing the other.

GEORGIA

Abortion pill murder charge dropped

A Georgia prosecutor dropped a murder charge Wednesday against a 23-year-old woman whose arrest after taking pills to end her pregnancy baffled even abortion opponents.

Dougherty County District Attorney Greg Edwards issued a statement saying he had dismissed a malice murder charge against 23-year-old Kenlissia Jones, who spent about three days in jail before she was released.

Edwards said Jones still faces a misdemeanor charge of possession of a dangerous drug.

Abortion-rights advocates and opponents of abortion alike had said they were stunned by the murder charge. Georgia has prohibited the prosecution of women for feticide or for performing illegal abortions in cases involving their own pregnancies. After reviewing the law, Edwards said he reached the same conclusion.

Jones was arrested Saturday at the hospital where she sought help after a county social services worker called police, according to an Albany police report.

A hospital social worker told police that Jones had taken four Cytotec pills that she ordered online and delivered her fetus after breaking up with her boyfriend.

The social worker told police Jones went into labour and delivered the fetus in a car on the way to the hospital. The fetus did not survive.

Cytotec is a brand name for misoprostol, a prescription drug used in combination with mifepristone to induce non-surgical abortions. The pills are sold with prescriptions in the United States, but are available over the counter and online in many countries.

The police report does not say how far along Jones was in her pregnancy.

Pope targets bad bishops

VATICAN

Tribunal for molestation accusations

Pope Francis took the biggest step yet to crack down on bishops who cover up for priests who rape and molest children, creating a new tribunal section inside the Vatican to hear cases of bishops accused of failing to protect their flock.

Wednesday's announcement has significant legal and theological implications. Bishops have long been considered masters of their dioceses and largely unaccountable.

That reluctance to intervene has prompted years of criticism from abuse victims, advocacy groups and others that the Vatican had failed to punish or forcibly remove bishops who moved predator priests from parish to parish, rather than report them to police or remove them from the ministry. The Vatican said Francis had approved proposals by his sexual abuse advisory board, which includes abuse survivors and experts in child protection policies. They call for a mechanism by which the Vatican can examine complaints of "abuse of office" by bishops.

A special new judicial section, with permanent staff, will be created "to judge bishops with regard to crimes of the abuse of office when connected to the abuse of minors," a Vatican statement said. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Scientists want end to oilsands projects

A group of 100 leading Canadian and U.S. scientists has issued an urgent call for a moratorium on new oilsands development and listed 10 reasons why no more projects should be permitted.

The text — signed by economists, biologists, climatologists and political scientists — has been sent to Prime Minister Stephen Harper and all members of Parliament. The signatories include 12 fellows of the Royal Society of Canada, 22 members of the US National Academy and a Nobel Prize winner.

They are careful to include

The deeper we get into a commitment to these large projects, the better off we are in the very short term, but the worse off we are in the long term.

David Keith

in their warning all high-carbon energy sources, including coal and other types of unconventional oil, but it's focused on the oilsands.

"No new oilsands or related infrastructure projects should proceed unless consistent with an implemented plan to rapidly reduce carbon pollution, safeguard biodiversity, protect human health and respect treaty rights," the letter says.

"Everyone in this group really sees what climate change is starting to do to our ecosystems and the potential for harming society in major ways," says David Schindler, a University of Alberta ecologist.

The harm will be more than environmental, suggested David Keith, who teaches both physics and public policy at Harvard.

"The world is going to gradually decarbonize and the decisions will not be driven from Alberta," he said.

"The deeper we get into a commitment to these large projects, the better off we are in the very short term, but the worse off we are in the long term."

Air Canada, WestJet nix carry-on limits

TRAVEL

Carriers won't follow others in reducing cabin bag size

Air Canada and WestJet say they won't reduce the size of permitted carry-on luggage to go along with new voluntary international guidelines.

Air Canada, which requires passengers to check baggage larger than its maximum carry-on dimensions, said Wednesday it is satisfied with its luggage size rules but supports the general concept of industry harmonization.

"It would be easier if everyone drove on the same side of the road, and most people would agree with that," Air Canada spokesman Peter Fitzpatrick said in an email. "The debate is over which side that should be, and that could go on a very long time and is ultimately speculative."

The International Air Transport Association says many airlines have agreed to reduce the size of carry-on bags to optimize cabin storage space.

Bags measuring no more than 21.5 x 13.5 x 7.5 inches (55 x 35 x 20 centimetres) will be tagged with an "IATA Cabin OK" logo.

The dimensions are slightly smaller than what is permitted on Air Canada and WestJet flights. Air Canada's bag must be no larger than 21.5 x 15.5 x 9 inches. WestJet's limits are slightly smaller at 21 x 15 x 9 inches.

"Currently we have no plans to change our carry-on allowance size," said WestJet spokeswoman Brie Thorstein-son Ogle in an email. "However, we evaluate and evolve guidelines when necessary to ensure they meet the necessary requirements for our guests and our operations."

IATA says the new carry-on bag size is intended to bring "common sense and order" to the problem of differing sizes.

"We know the current situation can be frustrating for passengers," senior vice-president Tom Windmuller said in a news release. "This work will help to iron out inconsistencies."

Fitzpatrick said Air Canada's larger carry-on baggage dimensions means anyone flying on planes following IATA guidelines will meet the airline's size requirements for carry-ons.

As attention to a women's issue goes, we choose poorly

It's been two weeks of Caitlyn Jenner. Are we done yet?

Buckets of ink and hours of airtime and seemingly endless web pages have dissected and pontificated on every possible angle: that she's a trans hero, that she represents an elite trans experience, that she's sexy, that she's been treated with sexism by the media, that she's a bad feminist (if a feminist at all) for coming out as a sex kitten, that she's a bad woman for embodying worn stereotypes of the so-called weaker sex.

Are you tired of it yet? I am.

As far as extended public attention to a women's cause goes, we chose poorly, friends.

The time we have devoted to that slick cover, and the effort we all took to really understand what it meant, has far outlasted what it deserved.

Meanwhile, we could have been writing about Chelsey Buchanan, a Halifax woman who's opened her home to abortion seekers from PEI, where there's no access to surgical abortions. Or writing about the war on abortion clinics in the U.S.

We might have dissected the recent words of a British Nobel scientist who called co-ed labs bad for science, because women are distracting to men.

Our energies could have been turned to research from Columbia Business School that says women's absence in boardrooms isn't due to female competitiveness, but to implicit company gender quotas. (In 2013, the Conference Board of Canada felt the need to argue the "business case" for women on company boards, as if we could be bad for the bottom line.)

If feminist reading is what you're after, why not disappear into the New Yorker's lengthy look at Angela Merkel, often the only female face in photo-ops of the world's most powerful leaders?

Jenner is so very far from the most important fodder for a debate on the state of feminism. Try: women earn one quarter less than men in Ontario; more than 3,000 women in Canada seek emergency shelter from domestic abuse on any given day; we account for 25 per cent of parliamentarians; globally, girls are twice as likely to be malnourished.

Yes, Jenner's was a dramatic reveal. Yes, it's good to put trans issues in the spotlight. But her photo op is not a pivotal moment for women.

It's just one very well shot, well-orchestrated and likely high-selling cover from a magazine devoted to opulence, power and sex.

Time, my friends, to move on.

THE BIG THING: MILLENNIAL-SPEAK

Taco Bell CEO Brian Niccol has made a concerted effort to get the company's staff to connect with its young customer base. Each week, they receive an email with a new vocabulary word curated by a group of 20-somethings and designed to help older folks keep up. Opinions are mixed as to whether this is a business-savvy way to engage the next generation of spenders, or a desperate move best described with a word that transcends generations: LAME. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

#TBT

A term nostalgia-prone millennials use on social media for "throwback Thursday."

Lit

Awesome, crazy, busy, hopping. "That party was lit." When used to describe a person, "lit" means drunk or high.

Bae

A synonym for "baby" and acronym for "before anyone else," popularized by a Pharrell Williams song.

On fleek

A variation of the more common "on point," meaning very stylish and refined. This neologism came from the video-sharing site Vine. "Shoe game on fleek."

Feels

Intense emotions. "This story about a blind goat with a seeing-eye dog is giving me All. The. Feels."

Throwing shade

Hurling insults in a highly skilful and passive-aggressive manner. This term originated in the drag community.

"I love how much you don't care about how you look."

"Ooh, throwing shade."

AF

An intensifier used primarily in texting and social media. Short for "as f--k," as in "dumb AF," "cute AF," "crazy AF."

Boom

An expression of emphasis; a four-letter statement of "I rest my case."

Basic

A description of someone, especially a woman, whose taste is so generic that she possesses no personality of her own. "Kayla loves Starbucks and scented candles. She's so basic."

Dat...doe An alternative to "that..though." Used to bookend in constructions that point out general awesomeness, especially in relation to something cute online. "Dat kitten doe."

Bible A short form for "I swear on the Bible" for which we have the Kardashians to thank. "I don't have any homework today. Bible!"

RESORT COLLECTION

New creative director leans on animal kingdom

In florals that matched the comfy chairs for his guests, in cat-eye glasses and dragonflies and bees and tigers and snakes, Gucci's new creative director Alessandro Michele put on a whimsical, eclectic show Thursday for his first resort collection.

Animal-kingdom adornments, splashes of disco lame, feminine sheers that exposed nipples and both warm and bold purples, yellows and pinks highlighted Michele's 62 looks for men and woman. Ruffles trimmed ladylike suits and high heels were chunky on sparkly mules.

Michele — who replaced Frida Giannini after her departure in January — closed a Chelsea street so the models could cross to the other side and enter his industrial space just as rolling metal gates were lifted. He covered floors with inviting oriental rugs.

The shaggy-haired, big-bearded designer in a slouchy white T-shirt, bracelets and fingers full of rings, greeted guests with warm hugs and a laugh. He said this collection, coming soon after his February debut in Milan, was focused on individual style.

"It's a kind of personal eccentricism," he said in a post-show interview. "It's a mix from the past and the present and from the soul, so you can believe in the way you dress," he said. "Everything matches together in a beautiful way in my mind."

Prepster stripes represented (on a silver bomber jacket he paired with an emerald green lace dress). So did '70s disco. Western-style touches added to his mix.

One cosy stripe coat was decorated with silver sparkle dragonflies and another was quilted in pale pink, trimmed with fur at the cuffs and worn with a Betty Draper scarf around a model's head. Some dresses flowed in tiers of ruffles while others were neatly pleated.

"It's about that feeling when a beautiful woman, where there's something that you do not expect," Michele said.

Has Michele, who has toiled for Gucci for 12 years, settled into his new role as creative director? He said he's getting there.

"Not quite relaxed," he laughed. "For a big company like Gucci, it's never-ending."

Dakota Johnson, Sam and Aaron Taylor-Johnson and Gucci president and CEO Marco Bizzarri attended. So did Alexander Wang and Joseph Altuzarra.

Wang considers Michele a welcome breath of fresh air.

"He's just getting started but he's really put his own stamp on who the new Gucci girl is. It's exciting," he said.

Altuzarra said Michele is "evolving the language of the house in a really interesting way, in a way that feels really fresh."

Faux pas: Is your festival outfit racist?

CULTURAL APPROPRIATION

There are ways to pay homage and not offend, says historian

Raquel Laneri
Metro | New York

It's music festival season, which means you can expect to see lots of Instagrams of celebs and models wearing all sorts of controversial, culturally inappropriate accessories, like Native American headdresses or South Asian bindis. And no matter how much backlash they face, consumers — and designers — can't seem to stop stealing from other cultures.

Indeed, "appropriation" seems to have reached a fever pitch in fashion: baby hairs on the Givenchy and DKNY runways, "squaw"(!) fashion at Dsquared2, an exact replica of a traditional Oaxacan blouse by French designer Isabel Marant.

"It's been going on for a long time," says historian Valerie Steele, director of the Museum at the Fashion Institute of Technology. "But while the feeling that it's a rather problematic phenomenon has existed among scholars, it's been slow to filter down to the fashion world."

That's partly because designers and tastemakers couched such practices in terms like "multiculturalism" or even "postmodernism."

Yet, says Steele, "it's too easy to say that it was always celebratory — particularly when it's referenced in racist language or done in a way that reinforces cultural stereotypes."

But even without racist language, cultural thievery can still be harmful, whether economically, socially or spiritually. "Many South African designers, for example, are resentful that European designers have appropriated their designs and textiles, and then lumped a variety of different, distinct cultures together under one name," says Steele. And the Australian Aborigines have spoken out about designers blithely using certain patterns that are sacred or that hold special meaning — like the bindi in Hinduism.

The main difference between cultural appropriation then versus now? The Internet has made it much easier for those who feel their culture and traditions threatened to speak out. But, rather than preventing consumers from engaging with another culture's sartorial customs, it actually allows them to do so in a way that's empowering and sensitive.

"If you're a white person, but you really love African Kente cloth — do the research," says Steele. "Ask your African-American friends, 'Will you be offended if I wore this?'" If you can't get African cloth straight from the source, then research brands that employ — and provide a living wage to — craftsmen in that area for its clothes."

If you are open and curious and say, 'I admire this, I like it, how can I wear it?' then people will take you seriously and respond to you.

Valerie Steele, director of the Museum at the Fashion Institute of Technology

ODE OR OFFENSIVE?

PIETRO D'APRANO/GETTY IMAGES

Dsquared2

Canadian designers Dean and Dan Caten of Dsquared2 showed a collection in Milan they described as "an ode to America's native tribes meets the noble spirit of Old Europe." They came under fire after promoting the show as #Dsqaw on social media.

PASCAL LE SEGRETAIR/GETTY IMAGES

Givenchy

Givenchy's Fall 2015 collection was called "Victorian Chola," riffing on a Mexican subculture. The word "chola" is problematic because it is said to have been used as a way to describe Mexican immigrants in a derogatory way, wrote style blog Refinery29. METRO

Reading from the Book of Joan

JOAN RIVERS

Melissa Rivers chronicles all the good times and good gags

Melissa Rivers wanted to laugh — and she wants her readers to do the same.

Consider it mission accomplished on both counts, thanks to her bestselling memoir, The Book of Joan: Tales of Mirth, Mischief, and Manipulation (Crown Archetype). It's a touching, revealing and above all funny paean to her mother, Joan Rivers, who died last year at 81 after complications from minor throat surgery.

The book is free of a daughter's grief, or her undeniable anger. (Rivers has filed a malpractice lawsuit against the Manhattan clinic where she says her mother suffered what she has called "shocking and, frankly, almost incomprehensible" incompetence.) Instead, the approach is lighthearted, affectionate — and funny.

"Writing it gave me permission to laugh and joke, and a safe place to do so," says Rivers, who, still reeling from her loss last fall, set to work with her writing partner, Larry Amoros, a long-time family friend and writer for Joan who could add his own rich store of recollections.

"We wanted to call the book Cheaper Than Therapy," says Rivers. "But we were afraid it would get mixed up in the self-help therapy section of the bookstore."

Your father didn't care if I went to bed mad. He cared if I went to Bergdorf mad.

Joan Rivers

In the first pages, Rivers attempts to summarize this pint-sized, outspoken force of nature: "My mother was a comedian, actress, writer, producer, jewelry monger, tchotchke maker, spokesperson, hand model, Celebrity Apprentice winner and a self-appointed somewhat-goodwill-ambassador to 27 Third World countries that were unaware they had a goodwill ambassador."

The book nods at an early concept offered by the publisher: a collection of Lessons I Learned From My Mother. It was an idea Rivers balked at.

"I don't know if people would want to take that advice," she laughs.

Yes, there was a method to Joan's madness, but it formed the logical underpinnings of someone who didn't always cater to logic.

Joan on marriage: "Your father didn't care if I went to bed mad. He cared if I went to Bergdorf mad."

Joan on cosmetic surgery: "Better to have a new you coming out of an old car than an old you coming out of a new car."

Rivers, now 47, grew up close to both her parents.

"People always said I was much more like my father (film and TV producer Edgar Rosenberg) than her, and they had a successful marriage. Maybe that's why she and I were so bonded."

One thing that tied them together: "Our love of the ironic and the absurd. Nothing was better than looking at each other when we were out somewhere" with a wordless exchange conveying, "Oh, have we got something to talk about when we get in the car! Can you believe what just happened?"

No wonder Joan and Melissa were also bonded professionally. Together they blazed a new frontier of style and snark on the glitziest red carpets, while Joan became a connoisseur of couture catastrophes as host of Fashion Police, which Melissa produced.

That show, minus queen bee Joan, returned on E! in January and promptly suffered a meltdown with cast strife and the abrupt departures of panellist Kelly Osbourne and new host Kathy Griffin. It is off the air again until fall.

"We came back too fast. None of us was ready," says Rivers. "It was extremely painful. I spent way too much time crying about the show and what it represents to me. But we learned. No, I don't know who is going to be in the cast. But now I'm actually excited to figure it out."

The pain of loss is ever-present in Rivers' life. Her mother's death is all too recent while, even after three decades, she says she still misses her father, who committed suicide in 1987.

But in her book, death rears its head in wryly humorous terms.

"I don't know, or pretend to know, what happens to us after we die," writes Rivers as she builds to one of her many laugh-lines. "Nobody really does, except the dead, and they're not talking (at least not to me, but I have AT&T: I can barely get living people on the phone)."

Whistling past the graveyard? Joan Rivers wasn't afraid of death, her daughter insists.

"It was an obsession: 'This is gonna happen.' But we would discuss it as calmly as you'd ask for a glass of water. She was very much at peace with the idea."

Maybe so, but she held her own at bay for 81 unbridled years. And as readers of The Book of Joan will surely realize between the laughs, it still came too soon.

THE CONFIDENCE CODE

Perfectionism may be holding many women back: Author

A book exploring the need for women to channel and boost their confidence proved eye-opening for co-author Claire Shipman — especially when she turned a critical lens on herself.

“One of the most valuable things for me in all the research is the impact it’s had on my parenting. I have really realized that it’s so important for kids to fail and to have struggles,” said Shipman, mother to son Hugo, 13, and daughter Della, 10.

“I think as a perfectionist and then a helicopter-ish parent ... I fall into the trap of: ‘Let me just make things easy for them’ or ‘I want to fix things’ or ‘I want them to do well.’”

In the bestseller The Confidence Code: The Science and Art of Self-Assurance — What Women Should Know (Harper Business), Shipman and co-author Katty Kay explore why even the most accomplished, educated and skilled women are often plagued by a lack of self-belief.

The Washington, D.C.-based journalists also seek to define the concept of confidence and investigate the nature and nurture factors at play.

Anecdotes and research reveal a reluctance among many women to seize opportunities for advancement.

A Hewlett-Packard study aimed at determining how to draw more women into top management found the company’s female employees only applied for promotions when they believed they met 100 per cent of the qualifications. Meanwhile, the men were “happy to apply” when they thought they could meet 60 per cent of the job requirements.

Other studies found female business school students negotiated for significantly less in salary compared to their male counterparts.

Even female global leaders aren’t immune to self-doubt.

The Confidence Code features an interview with Christine Lagarde, managing director of the International Monetary Fund. She confessed to moments where she needed to “go deep inside” as a way to reassure herself of her strength, confidence and abilities.

Lagarde also admitted she over prepares — a habit she realized she shared with German Chancellor Angela Merkel after a discussion they had.

“What we as a society do without even realizing it is we encourage the perfectionistic instinct in girls,” said Shipman, a contributor to ABC News show Good Morning America.

“I don’t think anymore we’re sending girls messages (that) ‘You can’t be president. You can’t be a doctor.’ ... No girl thinks those doors are closed anymore. But it’s just the kind of behaviour we encourage in terms of achievement that doesn’t always serve them as well as ... learning to fail and losing.”

As a self-confessed “master perfectionist” and “ruminator,” Shipman said she has worked to create new habits, like not over thinking about someone’s reaction to an email.

While the book encourages women to remind themselves of their abilities and achievements when self-doubt creeps in, Shipman said support networks are also key.

“The research shows for women, we often won’t act unless we have one person we respect saying: ‘Oh, you could win that seat. You could run for office. I could see you doing that.’

“But not just (saying): ‘You’re great’ (It’s) the power of encouraging us to take risks, encouraging us to do what seems uncomfortable.” THE CANADIAN PRESS

Candid tales from the world of fashion

Toronto-raised style guru Joe Zee will share stories from the fashion world in his upcoming memoir.

That’s What Fashion Is: Lessons and Stories from My Non-Stop, Mostly Glamorous Life in Style is scheduled for release on Oct. 13. Publisher St. Martin’s Press says the “funny and frank book” will see Zee let readers in on “tales, tricks and tips previously known only to the fashion elite.”

The U.S.-based Zee is editor-in-chief of digital magazine Yahoo Style. He is also an acclaimed stylist, fashion journalist and producer.

He started his career at Allure Magazine and served as fashion editor at W Magazine and creative director of Elle Magazine.

Zee returned to his hometown of Toronto in January to host the Canadian Arts & Fashion Awards, which honours homegrown talent within the arts and fashion community.

He was recognized with the vanguard award, which recognizes Canadians who have brought international attention to the fashion industry.

Adding to his already stacked schedule, Zee will co-host The F.A.B

3 CRIME NOVELS TO READ THIS SUMMER

BOOKWORMSue Carter

Canada may not have as many big-name marquee crime authors as there are in the U.S. and U.K., but our writers can deliver chilling twists and turns with the best of them (must be the weather). Here are some must-read thrillers, including CanLit selections.

Stephen King's new novel Finders Keepers — a guaranteed must-read for fans of his psychological horror Misery — will no doubt be packed into a lot of beach bags this summer. But for those who like their mystery-thrillers set a little closer to home, there are plenty of options from CanLit writers such as Linwood Barclay, Peter Robinson, Louise Penny and Giles Blunt.

Plot twists in period novel

This historical mystery by U.K.-based author Seán Haldane won the Arthur Ellis Award, Canada's biggest crime-novel prize.

Set in 1860s Victoria, the story follows British police officer Chad Hobbes, who is tasked with solving the violent murder of Dr. McCrory, an American psychiatrist whose unconventional healing methods include "phrenology, Mesmerism and sexual-mystical magnetism." A local medicine man is suspected as the murderer, but Hobbes soon discovers there's more to the case than anyone expected.

Scarier than housing prices

For her debut crime novel, award-winning poet Susan Glickman found inspiration in her own neighbourhood.

Set in Toronto's quiet tree-lined Hillcrest Village, the story follows a woman named Liz who discovers the dead body of a real estate agent near her home.

Liz becomes obsessed with his murder, partnering with a retired professor to solve the mystery, despite the police urging the amateur sleuths to back off.

Mafia Princess in the prairies

Caterina Edwards' latest book may be the first Mafia literary-noir novel ever with ties to Edmonton.

Fulvia, the "Mafia Princess," escapes her dutiful life in Sicily and moves to Alberta, only to have her husband murdered backhome.

Through the killing, she becomes connected to Marisa, the investigating chief of police, facing her own troubles as a woman running a station full of male officers who've made it clear they don't want her there.

McDowell on her life 'After Perfect'

INTERVIEW

Daughter of Wall Street criminal tells all in memoir

Emily Laurence
Metro in New York City

Growing up in an affluent Washington, D.C. suburb, Christina McDowell (née Christina Prousalis) had a picture-perfect life. But at 18, her life came crashing down when her father, Tom Prousalis, was arrested for fraud in connection with the conviction of Jordan Belfort, who was characterized in The Wolf of Wall Street.

McDowell's father went to prison and her family lost everything. She opens up to us about her decision to tell the story from her point of view in her new memoir, After Perfect.

The book is so personal. Was it a difficult decision to be so open?

I started writing my story many, many years ago as a way to process everything

Christina McDowell's new novel recounts her father's downfall. HANDOUT that was happening, but I fictionalized it because it was too painful to write any other way. I showed it to a couple of friends and they said, "No, it's not working."

This is a case of life being stranger than fiction. I started collecting letters, emails and everything from that time in my life and it slowly turned into a memoir. For me, it was about healing. It created a pathway to the truth and I learned more about myself than I think I ever intended to.

When The Wolf of Wall Street came out, you wrote an open letter criticizing the film's glorification of greed. Did you see the movie as a mockery of your life?

I just couldn't understand why Martin Scorsese would chose to make a movie about a man who had hurt so many people and exclude the victims. Whether he meant it to or not, it opened up a lot of wounds

"I do not have a relationship with my father today."
Christina McDowell

for many, many people.

Learning of your father's crime must have been really confusing for you because you grew up idolizing him quite a bit.

Oh, of course. I think every child can relate to this idea of putting your parents up on a pedestal. I had a really hard time when it happened. It happened when I was 18. At that age, legally you're an adult, but you're not prepared for the real world.

You're really active with InsideOut Writers, a non-profit for incarcerated youth. Do you think your past influenced your decision to work with them?

Absolutely. I relate to them because of my own feeling of abandonment, struggle to survive and being touched by the criminal justice system.

Writing is what healed you, so now you're helping them heal in the same way.

Exactly. Writing is so healing and we use it as a way to transform ourselves. We have the best time.

What is your viewpoint on money and wealth now?

I don't think there's anything wrong with having money or seeking to live a big life, but I do believe in ethical and moral boundaries with money. When you cross an ethical and moral line, that's where greed comes in and I certainly don't believe in living a greedy life.

PRISON LIFE

Real female inmates steal show in new docu-series

There's been plenty of hype about the return of Orange Is the New Black this week, but there's another TV series about women behind bars that is vying for viewers' attention.

Women in Prison, also premiering this week, is Investigation Discovery's latest docu-series and focuses on the real-life stories of six women serving time in a maximum-security state prison in Indiana.

The show features actors dramatizing the offences the women committed, and, much like the award-winning Netflix series, paints a multidimensional portrait of the inmates by focusing on their humanity more than their crimes.

Alicia Brown, one of the women featured in Women in Prison, hopes that fans of Orange Is the New Black might be drawn to this series, which debuts on Thursday.

"I think it will be great to attract the fans just because they have gotten to see a made-up version or a highly publicized version, so now they are kind of getting to get a glimpse into the real-life version," she said.

The show doesn't reveal what each woman did until near the end of the episode. In Brown's case, an addiction to prescription pills led her down a criminal path, which she described as a shameful experience.

She said her and other prisoners "not only have to deal with what we have done, we have to deal with what we have done to our families."

"My whole reason in doing this is to help other women who are out there, who haven't come to prison," said Brown, who is serving a 10-year sentence. "They haven't had this happen yet. I am hoping to stop them from doing what I have done."

Producer Alexandra Lacey said using actors to recreate scenes from the prisoners' past helps the audience connect to the story.

"They will be able to go on that journey with them and really empathize," Lacey said.

"It is a lot easier for them to relate to the women because you can see them in that former life before they came to prison."

Lacey said working within a women's prison is different because of the nurturing and welcoming feeling she gets from prisoners. She also

Canadian History

Between 1995 and 2004, six correctional facilities for women offenders were opened across Canada following the closure of the maximum-security Prison for Women in Kingston, Ont.

A healing lodge was also built for women offenders who are classified as minimum or medium security level.

Women deemed minimum or medium security level live in housing units with communal living areas, where they are responsible for their own daily needs including cooking, cleaning and laundry.

Women classified as maximum security are placed in secure units, where high-level intervention and supervision is provided by specially trained staff.

noted the inmates' resourcefulness: They created their own makeup, fancy ramen noodle dishes and even egg rolls prepared with popcorn bags.

Lacey said for her and her small crew, "the experience opened our eyes to the many talented women sitting in prisons across America for sentences that are very long."

Brown, once a soccer mom and wife, said a lot of her assumptions about prison were wrong. Many of the viewers will find the same.

"There are a lot of me. I am a normal here. Many women get wrapped up in things they never thought they would," said Brown.

Copy of Fifty Shades of Grey sequel stolen before release

Publisher Penguin Random House says a copy of the upcoming Fifty Shades of Grey sequel has been stolen, just over a week before publication day. Penguin Random House said Wednesday that Kent Police in southern England are investigating the theft of a finished copy of E.L. James' new book, Grey.

The publisher said it could not comment further because a police investigation is underway.

Kent Police confirmed that "officers are making inquiries after receiving a report that a book had been stolen" on Monday.

The book retells the erotic adventures of the millions-selling Fifty Shades trilogy from the point of view of S&M-loving billionaire Christian Grey.

Penguin Random House said Grey would be published as planned on June 18, Christian Grey's birthday.

Nanna Bryndis Hilmarsdottir from Of Monsters And Men says she gets why people think they sound like Arcade Fire. GETTY IMAGES FILE

Four years in the waiting

NEW RELEASE

Of Monsters and Men drop sophomore album, finally

Of Monsters and Men couldn't relax until they finished their second album — their fans made sure of it.

Their platinum-selling debut My Head Is an Animal was originally released back in September 2011 and some of their devotees' patience for a follow-up seemed to wane in the years since.

"On Twitter, if you ever do anything that isn't creating the album — like, 'Oh, I'm outside, having a beer' or something — then people are like: 'No, go home, finish the album,'" laughed lead singer Nanna Bryndis Hilmarsdottir in a telephone interview.

"We just kind of realized that hurrying up wouldn't make it better.

"We probably could have kept going forever. But it was time to stop."

And thus this week's release of Beneath the Skin, a record touted as darker and more intimate than the band's wildly popular debut.

The band was just getting to know one another when you made the first album. Did the increased familiarity change your approach this time?
Yeah definitely. This one is more personal, maybe.

It was very challenging for us to not have that guard up. That's actually the one very conscious decision we made. We said: 'OK, we're going to sit down, write these lyrics, say things that are uncomfortable and we're going to really go there and we're going to go all the way.'

We don't want to half-ass it. It was very freeing. It was very satisfying when it was over.

I hear you're a big fan of (Montreal's) Grimes.

I listened to her a lot when we were on tour, and I saw her a few times on tour. She has released a few songs since, I don't even know if they're making the album. They're mysterious — like that song Go, or that new song.

I'm just so excited to hear her next album.

Of Monsters and Men were frequently compared to Arcade Fire. How did you feel about that?

I love Arcade Fire. I think they're a really, really great band. When we started out, yeah, there were a lot of comparisons. When it's someone you like, you don't mind at all. I think we understood what they were saying, but we also think we sound different.

Mark McEwan offers some food for thought

TOP CHEF CANADA

Celebrity chef warns of long, arduous hours in industry

Food television has created a groundswell of attention to the restaurant game, says chef Mark McEwan, who was head judge on the culinary contest show Top Chef Canada.

But young people pursuing a career as a chef often have a big surprise when they get into the business and realize how busy service can be.

McEwan, who owns four restaurants in Toronto — North 44, One, Fabbria and Bymark — also hosted The Heat on Food Network Canada, a look behind the scenes at his restaurant and catering business along with the building of his first upscale gourmet food store, McEwan, which opened in 2009.

McEwan, author of two cookbooks, said he did the high-pressure “pass” every night till he was 47, a role that involves monitoring orders and the quality of food as it leaves the kitchen.

“And now I see guys and they’re 32 and they’re not doing the pass anymore and they have a chef de cuisine and it’s like ‘I’m past it all now.’ You know what? You’ve got to stay in the game,” he said in an interview last month at the culinary conference Terroir Symposium.

McEwan, now 58, stays on top of his game running his company, the McEwan Group with a staff of 500. That includes catering and opening a second store in downtown Toronto.

Does food television give a false sense of the business?

It’s very strenuous work. It’s long hours, longer than most hours, tougher conditions. You’re working weekends. Your service can last five hours and that’s rigorous. It’s athletic. It’s hard — if you’re in a busy restaurant.

But then I think there’s a lot of places for young kids to go other than the restaurant business, so getting into food

People thought that I was a tough judge but fair.

Mark McEwan

styling, they’re getting into the catering business, they’re getting into institutional work ...

To be a mainline chef in a top-flight restaurant it’s a long journey, a long journey to get there. And I don’t think a lot of these young people understand what it’s about.

Did producers influence how you chose a winner in Top Chef Canada?

I was all about the best chef winning. It was always about the cooking for me. It was never about anything else.

You do have television colliding with the professionalism of cooking, what’s going to sell, what drives ratings, how do you get broad viewership and now the whole platform is changing.

Cable television is changing. You have Netflix. You have the Internet, people doing a lot of video clips on the Internet now. It’s like this molten foundation that’s trying to find a new direction.

Do they window-dress for television? Sure, they do. They do that in every aspect of television, but having said that, at the same time, it’s been very good for the chefs. It’s been very good for the industry and now we’re at this point of change and flex in food television and it’s going to be fun to watch and see what the direction is, like where will it land in two or three years.

Limit your sugar intake

Drinking a sugar-sweetened beverage daily could increase risk for non-alcoholic fatty liver disease (NAFLD), according to a new study.

The condition occurs when fat inundates the liver cells, hindering their normal functioning.

Individuals who reported drinking more than one sugar-sweetened beverage per day had a higher rate of NAFLD than their abstaining counterparts. The study, published in the Journal of Hepatology, found no association between diet soda and NAFLD.

Participants self-reported their calorie intake, smoking and alcohol habits and the link remained between sugar-sweetened beverages and NAFLD after the researchers adjusted data accordingly. AFP

Japan's aging virgins at loss for love

SEX

Japanese men lost confidence in economic slowdown

Takashi Sakai is a healthy 41-year-old heterosexual man with a good job and a charming smile. But he's never had sex, one of a growing number of middle-aged Japanese men who are still virgins.

Sakai has never even had any kind of relationship with a woman, and said he has no idea how he might start one.

"I've never had a girlfriend. It's never happened," he said. "It's not like I'm not interested. I admire women. But I just cannot get on the right track."

It might sound like the subject for a Hollywood comedy, but far from being the social misfit portrayed by Steve Carell in 2005's The 40-Year-Old Virgin, Sakai is one of a crowd.

A 2010 survey by the National Institute of Population and Social Security Research found that around a quarter of unmarried Japanese men in their 30s were still virgins — even leading to the coining of a specific term, "yaramiso," to describe them.

The figure was up around three percentage points from a similar survey in 1992.

The period corresponds with Japan's prolonged economic slowdown, after a stock and asset bubble burst and the one-time financial powerhouse suffered years of lacklustre growth.

Matchmaking expert Yoko Itamoto said the economic emasculation has taken its toll on Japan's men, as more of them struggle to find secure, full-time jobs.

"Many men seem to have lost confidence as they've lost their economic muscle," she said.

"In the past two decades, the situation for Japanese men has been very tough and competitive."

The pain caused by an inability to form emotional and physical relationships with women is something one 49-year-old architect, who did not wish to be named, knows too well.

Only twice in his life has he had romantic and sexual feelings for a woman — the first time in his mid-20s and then again two decades later. Both rebuffed him.

"It was devastating," he said. "It seemed to invalidate my life and take away my reason to live."

Directly comparable international statistics are difficult to come by, but Japanese people across the board appear to have less sex than those in other developed countries. AFP

Vaccine against HPV might work after one dose

Protecting girls from cervical cancer might be possible with just one dose of the HPV vaccine rather than the three now recommended, a new analysis suggests.

If their results are confirmed, requiring just one dose of the vaccine could have a big impact on how many girls around the world get immunized.

Cervical cancer is the fourth-most common cause of cancer death in women worldwide and is estimated to kill more than 260,000 every year.

Researchers from the U.S. National Cancer Institute and elsewhere looked at data from previous trials of the HPV vaccine, Cervarix. They estimated vaccine effectiveness after about four years to be between 77 per cent and 86 per cent for all the young women, regardless of how many shots they received.

Besides Glaxo's Cervarix, a similar vaccine, Gardasil, is sold by Merck & Co. It's unclear if that vaccine would also work with fewer doses, although experts said that was possible since Gardasil is also made with virus-like particles. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Boxing champ gets animated

India's five-time world boxing champion and Olympic bronze medallist Mary Kom is to star in animated form as the country's first cartoon girl superhero, the series' production company said Tuesday.

The boxer has signed a deal with ScreenYug Creations, based in the western Indian state of Maharashtra, that will see a fictional childhood version of the national hero in Mary Kom Jr.

"She's between eight and 10 years old, and gets powers when she wears her boxing gloves," Ashish Kulkarni, CEO of ScreenYug Creations, told AFP.

"She does lots of good things like fighting villains," Kulkarni added, saying the television series will be aired sometime in 2016.

It is the second time recently that Kom's life has inspired a screen outing after the release last year of the Indian biopic Mary Kom starring Bollywood actress Priyanka Chopra.

Kom, 32, is one of India's most successful sports stars and won gold at last year's Asian Games in Incheon, South Korea.

She said the animated series would focus on educating children about useful self-defence moves, according to the Press Trust of India news agency.

"I want girls to be confident, strong," Kom said in quotes carried by PTI. "Parents are usually not keen on fighting games ... but with all the crime going around, their eyes are now open and this will help," she added.

Kulkarni told PTI Mary Kom Jr would be "India's first girl superhero animated series." AFP

Paltrow's awkward family vacation

SUMMER SLEEPOVER

New partners of uncoupled duo to holiday with the kids

There's showing off that you're totally OK with your ex-husband dating again, and then there's this, which is just plain weird: Gwyneth Paltrow is planning, depending on whom you talk to, a family vacation where she and Chris Martin each bring along their significant others — Glee co-creator Brad Falchuk for her, Jennifer Lawrence for him — or she's planning an intimate couples' retreat for the foursome that just so happens to also include their kids.

Either way, yikes. "Gwyneth recognizes it's time for Jen to meet the whole family, and she wants Chris to be there for Brad's first proper bonding experience with the children," a source tells RadarOnline.

"The plan is to spend a week together in Hawaii as soon as all their schedules permit, but definitely before the end of summer."

If you think this is a terrible idea, Lawrence is apparently right there with you: "Jen is dreading it," the source adds.

"Chris is still spellbound by Gwyneth and her rules, so he's insisting on it."

Happy trails?

DIVORCE RUMOURS

Jen fed up with Ben

This certainly won't help all those divorce rumours swirling around Ben Affleck and Jennifer Garner's marriage. The latest?

"She can't take it anymore. She's been consulting with a high-profile divorce lawyer," a source tells Life & Style, adding that while Garner was in Montreal recently for work, "she got a call that Ben was 40 minutes late to pick up the kids from school. She had to scramble to arrange another ride for them."

While that might not seem like a major infraction, it's apparently one of those last straw situations.

"She doesn't trust Ben alone with the kids," the source says. "Custody is not negotiable."

This sounds like it will be the opposite of fun.

Michael Jackson fans try to stop Neverland sale

Michael Jackson's fans are not thrilled about plans to unload the late singer's most notable asset, the Neverland Ranch near Santa Barbara, Calif.

They're so incensed, actually, that they've started a petition to halt a potential sale.

"Neverland, Michael Jackson's house, is one of the most important places for Michael Jackson's fans," the petition, already signed by nearly 8,000 fans, reads. "It's one of the reminders that we have of Michael."

The attempts to petition Jackson's estate, however, have been a bit misguided, since the property is actually owned by Colony Capital.

"As has been said in previous statements from the Estate, both to the media and to the fan community, the Estate is very disappointed over the decision by Colony Capital to sell Neverland," a spokesman says.

"Unfortunately, that does not change the reality that the Estate is not in a position to stop the sale of the property," NED EHRLBAR/METRO IN HOLLYWOOD

$117,500

Calgary

An affordable, well-kept condo is located at 1620-70 St. S.E. in the Applewood community of Calgary. The property offers all the basic amenities in a compact design of 258 sq. ft., and would make a great home base for someone looking to downsize to condo living. The suite includes a well-maintained washer and dryer, clean fridge and stove, and Beechwood countertop. The unit features durable tile and hardwood flooring and a private balcony on the top floor of a clean and quiet pet-friendly building. For sale by owner through the Com-free Commonsense Network, 403-589-1915.

$178,900

Vancouver

This 490-sq.-ft., one-bedroom suite is in the trendy Lower Lonsdale area. It's close to the Lonsdale Quay Market, Waterfront Park and the SeaBus. The Forbes Manor suite has great views of the harbour. The living room opens out to a spacious balcony. The suite features bamboo laminate floors and a stylish bathroom with double vanity. The listing agent is Shirley Lord with Sutton Group — West Coast (Broadway), 604-760-2012.

$144,900

Edmonton

Here's a top-floor, 538-sq. ft., spacious one-bedroom, one-bathroom condo that's close to everything: downtown, shopping, and public transit. The renovated unit has a large living room and access to the balcony that spans the length of the condo. The galley-style kitchen has plenty of cupboard space and opens into an eating nook. The building features a laundry room and assigned parking. Brent MacIntosh is a sales representative with Re/Max River City, 780-445-0091.

$99,000

Winnipeg

Here's a great deal on a 550-sq. ft. unit. This trendy condo has been extensively renovated and contains new Kitchen Craft cabinets, granite countertops, and stainless-steel appliances. The bathroom has a funky, claw-foot bathtub, and the living room features a wall of exposed brick that perfectly suits the minimalist, industrial decor. Listing agent is Scott Moore, a sales representative with Realty Executives Premiere, 204-995-7355.

Ask a designer: Make room work

HOW TO

Furniture arrangement makes or breaks a space

Sometimes the way to improve a room isn't to buy new furniture: it's to rearrange pieces you already own.

"Changing up the placement of your furniture can make a massive difference," says designer Brian Patrick Flynn, founder of Flynnside Out Productions. Adding, subtracting or relocating furniture, he says, affects "how natural light plays in the space and also how frequently the room gets used. By simply adding a bench to a wall, a room can become more of a hangout." Removing a few pieces to create more space "can make it feel a bit more casual and informal."

A strategic furniture layout turns a large room into two cosy conversation spaces.

CHRISTOPHER PATEY/BURNHAM DESIGN VIA THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

How do professionals map out a furniture plan, choosing the best location for each item? Flynn and two other interior designers — Dan Faires, host of HGTV's Dan-Made, and Betsy Burnham of the California-based design firm Burnham Design — share advice:

Analyze your space

Begin by deciding how the room will be used, Burnham says, and consider any quirks: Are there lots of windows or doors? Unique architectural items such as a fireplace or beautiful windows with a view? A particular piece of furniture or art that you want visitors to notice?

Depending on the answers, Flynn likes to choose one "standout feature" and then arrange furniture in a way that highlights it.

Also, says Burnham, "lighting can direct a furniture plan." Is there a lot of natural light or will you need plenty of lamps? Are there built-in sconces or a central chandelier?

Allow space

Don't skimp on empty space. "I always allow a minimum of 18 inches between sofas and coffee tables," Faires says, "and 3 to 5 feet for walk spaces. The flow and negative space in a room is as important as the overall function and the furniture" because it makes the space feel more open, uncluttered and inviting. Consider the size and placement of rugs. "I cannot imagine designing a living-room space with a rug any smaller than an 8-by-10," Faires says. "The rug is meant to unify the entire space and connect furniture pieces together, so a good rule of thumb is that at least the front legs of any sofas or chairs in the living room should be on the rug. For a larger area rug, allow at least 18 inches from the edge of the rug to the wall."

In very large rooms or loft spaces, rugs can help define small areas and make the space feel organized.

"To keep everything balanced while visually separating each zone, use area rugs in co-ordinating colours with slightly different textures and patterns," Flynn says.

Break the rules

While some symmetry is important to "ground a furniture plan," Burnham says, mixing in a little asymmetry "makes for a much more interesting room."

If she flanks a sofa with matching end tables and table lamps, "we may balance the grouping with mismatched chairs and a standing lamp." Remember, you don't have to place furniture along walls. "Furniture in the middle of the room helps highlight architectural features and also aids in proper movement throughout the space," Flynn says. Placing furniture away from walls also works well in spaces that have lots of doors, or soaring windows that shouldn't be obstructed. And not every living room needs a sofa. Burnham suggests trying "an unusual layout, like a living room with four lounge chairs around a centre coffee table."

Use unexpected pieces, such as "a library table stacked with books in a wide hallway, or two area rugs instead of one to define spaces within a bedroom," she says.

STANLEY CUP FINAL

Lightning fall just short in Chicago without Bishop

Talk of a must-win game was hyperbole. The Chicago Blackhawks didn't face elimination but knew they couldn't lose twice at home and feel good about themselves.

So they showed why they're two-time champions by beating the Tampa Bay Lightning 2-1 in Game 4 of the Stanley Cup final Wednesday night at United Center to even the best-of-seven 2-2.

Game 5 is Saturday back at Amalie Arena in Tampa, Fla.

Brandon Saad scored the game-winner in the third period as the Blackhawks beat surprise Lightning starting goaltender Andrei Vasilevskiy. Captain Jonathan Toews scored earlier in the night on the rookie, who replaced the injured Ben Bishop.

Vasilevskiy made 17 saves in his first-career Stanley Cup start. At the other end Corey Crawford stopped 24 of the 25 shots he faced, including many in the final minutes as the Lightning tried desperately to get the tying goal.

Alex Killorn scored Tampa Bay's only goal.

The Blackhawks struggled to get much going in the first few minutes. It took more than eight minutes for their first shot on Vasilevskiy, and they only got two during the first period.

Chicago tested Vasilevskiy in the second and beat him on its fifth shot of the night. After Marian Hossa's shot hit Vasilevskiy, Patrick Sharp tapped the puck to the other side of the net where a crashing Toews scored 6:40 into the period.

The Blackhawks have had such problems holding leads, and Game 4 was no different. But this time they led a whole five-plus minutes before giving up the tying goal.

That came with Trevor van Riemsdyk gassed and Crawford looking the wrong direction. Valtteri Filppula made a perfect pass from behind the net to Killorn at the side of the net, and he tapped it in easy at 11:47 to make it 1-1.

The Blackhawks cracked the 20-year-old goaltender again 6:22 into the third period. Vasilevskiy blocked the puck away from Saad, but the forward recovered it and sent a backhand in to give Chicago the lead.

This time the Blackhawks made it stand up. But only after a furious finish that included Brent Seabrook getting his stick on a Steven Stamkos shot with the net wide open.

WADA calls out CFL on its drug policy

The World Anti-Doping Agency says the CFL's drug policy has "room for improvement." WADA released a statement Wednesday after the head of the organization's only accredited lab in Canada slammed the league earlier this week for failing to reprimand first-time drug offenders or upholding suspensions handed down in university.

The CFL/CFLPA's drug policy states that a player who initially tests positive is subject to mandatory testing for two years, but does not face suspension and is not named publicly. A second offence would result in a three-game suspension, while a third positive test would mean a year-long ban.

above .500 for the first time since May 9. Copeland (1-0), who was making a spot start in place of Aaron Sanchez, went seven innings, allowing one earned run on six hits while striking out seven. Wednesday was the right-hander's first career major league start. The loss drops Miami (24-36) to 3-6 during interleague play this season.

The Blue Jays took a 2-0 lead in the second. Edwin Encarnacion led off the inning with an infield single. Smoak followed it up with a ground rule double. Then Encarnacion scored on a Martin base hit thanks to a throwing error from Marlins' third baseman Martin Prado. Two batters later Smoak scored on a sacrifice fly from Kevin Pillar.

Toronto added to its lead in the fourth. Encarnacion got things started with a lead off double. Smoak then took Koehler deep to right field off of the suites in the third deck for his fourth home run of the season. Martin followed up with a solo shot, his ninth of the season, giving the Blue Jays a 5-0 lead before both Reyes and Donaldson homered.

Curry confident a Grizzlies-style turnaround can be repeated

All things considered, the Golden State Warriors rather would have been golfing.

That's what some players did the last time they found themselves in this situation, when they were getting outmuscled and even outthustled, banged and beaten by a bigger team.

They couldn't get a tee time Wednesday. NBA Finals rules required the team to come to the arena for media obligations on the off day. But just as they fought their way out of that situation against Memphis in the Western Conference semifinals, they believe they will overcome another 2-1 deficit now against Cleveland. "We'll figure out our game and the adjustments we need to make as we watch film later today, and we'll be ready tomorrow to give our best effort," MVP Stephen Curry said. "I feel like we're pretty confident we can turn this around."

They've accomplished it before, against a team that did some of the same things the Cavaliers are doing now. The Grizzlies, with big bodies inside, play a rugged style reminiscent of Eastern Conference basketball. They won Game 2 at Oracle Arena and came home to win Game 3 in that series, sending Golden State to the video room.

Golden State has averaged just 97.3 points in this series, even with two games going to overtime, after leading the NBA with 110 per game during the regular season. The Warriors were held to 90 and 89 in their back-to-back losses to the Grizzlies, then bounced back with 102.3 per game in running off three straight victories.

"We're down 2-1 on the road. Same sequence of games, win-loss-loss, so very similar situations," Curry said. "Obviously a different team, so you've got to adjust accordingly. But the mission is we've got to win Game 4. Go home with an even series and take it from there." THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RECIPE Fresh Corn Soup

EAT LIGHT AT HOME

Rose Reisman
rosereisman.com

@rosereisman

You can always substitute canned corn for fresh corn.

Ready in

Prep time: 15 minutes
Cook time: 15 minutes

Ingredients

- 2 tsp vegetable oil
- 1 ½ cups diced sweet onion
- 1 ½ tsp minced garlic
- 6 fresh corn cobs or 6 cups canned corn
- 2 cups chicken or vegetable stock
- ¼ cup 2 per cent evaporated milk
- Salt and pepper
- ½ cup frozen green peas, defrosted and slightly mashed
- 6 cooked baby cocktail shrimp (optional)

Directions

1. In a soup pan, heat oil and sauté onion and garlic until soft, about five minutes.
2. Meanwhile, with a sharp knife, slice kernels from corn. Add all but a half cup of the corn kernels to sautéed onions and cook for another three minutes.
3. Add stock, cover and simmer for five minutes. Place in food processor, add milk, salt and pepper and purée until smooth. Add back to soup pan, add remaining half cup corn and gently heat for two minutes, until corn is tender.
4. Place in bowls, garnish with peas and shrimp, if using.

★ IT'S ALL IN THE STARS by Sally Brompton

♈ Aries March 21 - April 20
You won't have to tell others what kind of mood you are in, they will know by the look on your face exactly what you are thinking and feeling. If they are smart they will give you what you desire — or stay out of your way!

♉ Taurus April 21 - May 21
Forget about material things and focus on the fun side of life. Yes, making money can be fun too but there are even better things you could be doing today. Someone you care for deeply needs some TLC.

♊ Gemini May 22 - June 21
This is a good time for social activities, so why not throw a party and invite all your friends. You may even get the chance to get back on good terms with someone you fell out with earlier in the year.

♋ Cancer June 22 - July 23
Why so cautious? Why so reluctant to take risks? Whatever the reason you need to get over it. There is some good news coming your way and by the weekend you won't be cautious at all — you may even be reckless.

♌ Leo July 24 - Aug. 23
Try not to upset someone who is way more powerful than you. If they don't like what you have to say they will almost certainly make life tough for you. You don't have to flatter them — just don't offend.

♍ Virgo Aug. 24 - Sept. 23
You need to impress someone important and give your reputation a boost. You may have left it late but it's never too late, so get your act together and make sure those above you know what you can do.

♎ Libra Sept. 24 - Oct. 23
You may not be able to explain how you reached a certain conclusion or answer but you know deep inside that it is right, so go with your instincts and don't let others persuade you to do something different.

♏ Scorpio Oct. 24 - Nov. 22
Help will arrive just when you most need it today, so don't despair, even if the predicament you find yourself in makes it look as if there is no way out. You are being watched over by powers that won't let you come to harm.

♐ Sagittarius Nov. 23 - Dec. 21
Think back to what happened earlier in the year. Did you miss out on something because you were afraid to take a chance? If so, and if you regret it, you will soon get the opportunity to make amends.

♑ Capricorn Dec. 22 - Jan. 20
Certain routines and methods have had their day and need to be replaced. Don't wait any longer. If you leave it too long the chance will pass you by and you could be stuck in the past forever.

♒ Aquarius Jan. 21 - Feb. 19
There is no point arguing with people whose opinions are so different to your own that there is no middle ground. On the other hand, the world would be a boring place if everyone agreed about everything.

♓ Pisces Feb. 20 - March 20
Cosmic activity in the domestic area of your chart will help resolve differences of opinion that have dragged on too long. It's always a good idea to get along with those you live with — even more so those you love.
